Eureka Weather:

A front will move across northwest California today bringing wet and cooler weather through Wednesday. This will be followed by a brief break on Thursday with more rain possible Friday and Saturday.

Periods of unsettled weather and cooler than average temperatures will continue through early next week as a series of weak storm systems move into Northern California. Rainfall amounts will remain light, resulting in little relief from ongoing drought conditions.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

A low pressure system in the Gulf of Alaska will pivot several weather systems through Northern California over the next week. None will be big precipitation producers with the best chances of rain or snow over the mountains and northern Sacramento valley. The weather systems are forecast to move through this morning, late Friday and Monday with drying in between. Daytime highs will be near or below normal over the next week.

Hanford Weather:

In the wake of a cold frontal passage, a cool southwest flow will remain over Central California through Friday. Another frontal system will pass to the north of Central California this weekend. Temperatures will average near normal with dry weather.

Los Angeles Weather:

A night through morning low clouds and fog weather pattern will persist through the weekend with slightly below normal afternoon temperatures.

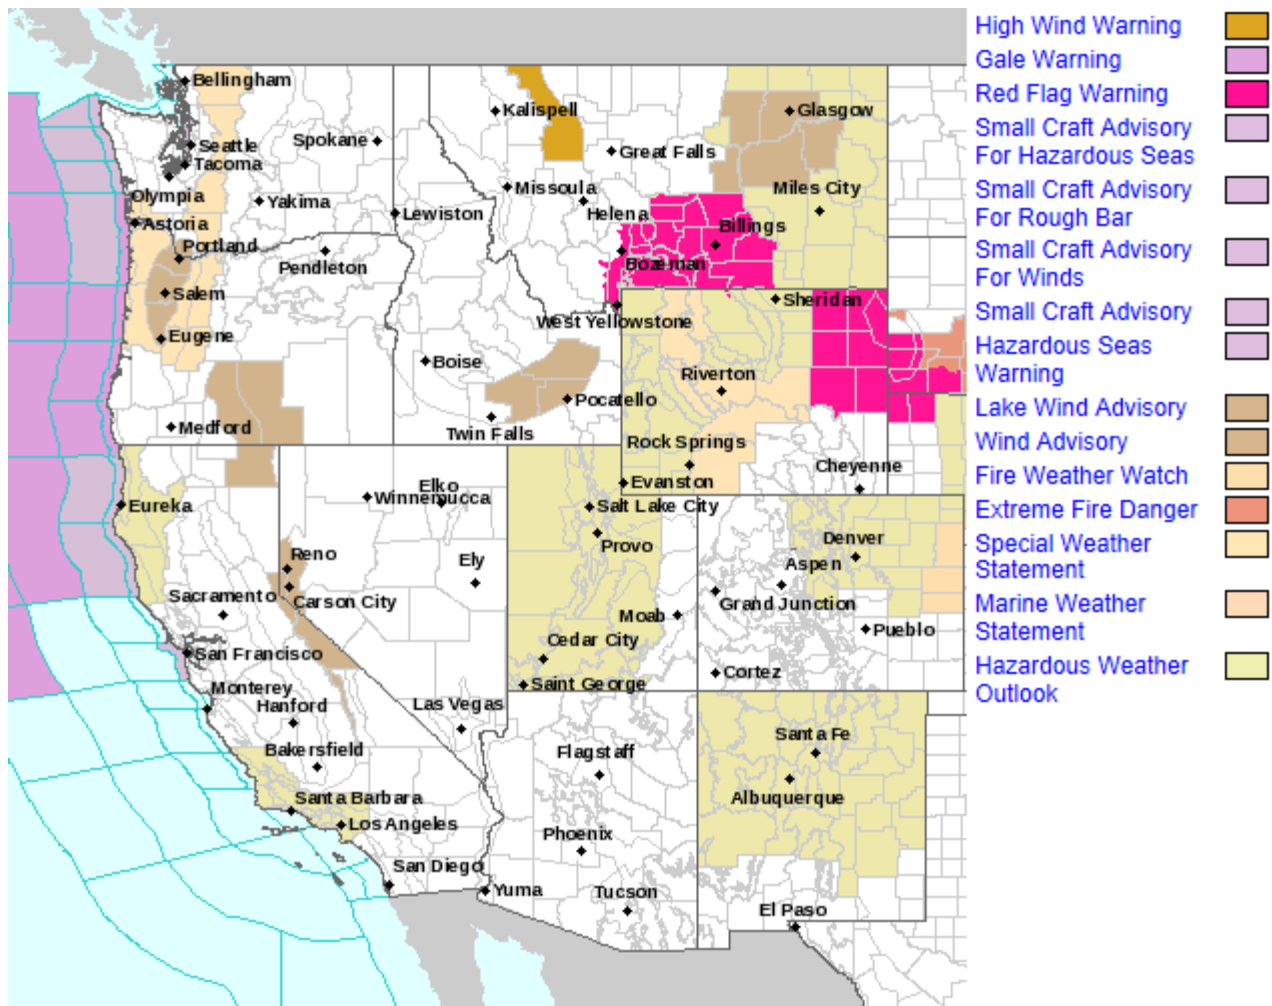

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

A low pressure system moving inland along the West Coast today will bring cooling, a deeper marine layer, and gusty west winds to the mountains and deserts. Slightly below average high temperatures will continue into Saturday along with the deeper marine layer. For Sunday and Monday, weak high pressure aloft will bring slight warming and a little shallower marine layer.

Southeast California Weather:

Dry conditions are expected into early next week. Thick high clouds can be expected mainly today and Friday otherwise skies will be mostly clear. Expect high temperatures to be a little bit cooler today with little change thereafter.
